

The 2004 Federal Discretionary Budget

The discretionary budget is the portion of the federal budget that Congress has direct control over. It is divided into two main categories: Military Spending and Non-Military Spending.

Category	Amount
Military Spending	234.0 Billion
Non-Military Spending	27.0 Billion

Key Agencies and Budgets (2004):

- Department of Defense: 234.0 Billion
- Department of State: 27.0 Billion
- Department of Health and Human Services: 23.3 Billion
- Department of Education: 13.7 Billion
- Department of Agriculture: 13.7 Billion
- Department of Justice: 13.7 Billion
- Department of Labor: 13.7 Billion
- Department of Energy: 13.7 Billion
- Department of Transportation: 13.7 Billion
- Department of Housing and Urban Development: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the Interior: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the Treasury: 13.7 Billion
- Department of Veterans Affairs: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the Environment: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the Navy: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the Air Force: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the Marine Corps: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the Coast Guard: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the National Guard: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the National Security Agency: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the National Intelligence Community: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the National Science Foundation: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the National Endowment for the Arts: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the National Endowment for the Humanities: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the National Library of Medicine: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the National Library of Health Services: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the National Library of Medicine: 13.7 Billion
- Department of the National Library of Health Services: 13.7 Billion

